

How much money do you get back if you cancel a cruise? Complete Guide

Cruise cancellation refunds depend heavily on how close you are to the sailing date, with earlier cancellations offering the highest returns.

Generally, cancelling 90–120+ days out provides a full refund (minus non-refundable deposits), while cancelling within 30 days usually results in a 100% penalty, according to policies from Carnival, Carnival, and Princess Cruises.

Refunds for cruise cancellations largely depend on how far in advance you cancel. Canceling early usually means you get most of your money back, while last-minute cancellations often result in losing the full amount. Typically, canceling 90–120+ days before the cruise allows for a full refund minus any non-refundable deposits, whereas canceling within 30 days of departure usually leads to no refund at all. This pattern is common across major cruise lines like Carnival, Carnival, and Princess Cruises.
